

WALDORF ESTATE OF FEAR

On October 25th, 2019, The Haunt Rater visited Waldorf Estate of Fear in Lehighton, Pa. Waldorf has become a regular visit for us, and why not? Angie, the creative mind behind Waldorf, is a genius. Waldorf has three amazing attractions: Terror in the Corn, Infection and Waldorf Hotel.

We started our night with Terror in the Corn. Terror in the Corn is a terrifying hayride through, you guessed it, a corn field! If you visited Waldorf in the past, you will notice immediately that the hayride has changed. It keeps some of the classic characters, such as Freddy, Jason and Pennywise (my personal favorite) and mixes it with some of their own original scenes. Horrifying! They definitely put on one hell of a show, which is the key to a successful hayride! Come and take a ride through Terror in the Corn and meet the Pumpkin King. Will you make it out alive?

INFECTION

Our next stop is a favorite of mine... Infection. You're given a belt with three flags on it. Each flag represents an essential organ. The task at hand is to make it through a zombie infested trail with at least 1 flag still on your belt. How will we do against the undead? Last time, we all escaped with a "vital" organ intact. We moved through cautiously, trying not to disturb the undead. The zombies are waiting, 2 minutes in and one of us loses a flag. Oh, it's on! I am not losing any flags this year! I came across a cluster of zombies, I zigged, I zagged, dodged and ducked. HAHA, no flags taken! RIP ugh, there goes that flag! We rushed through, trying not to lose anymore flags. There are too many zombies, we end up losing our newest member who catches up with no flags left! In the end, Rob had 2, Joe had 0 and I had only 1 left. Infection is an adrenaline-fueled attraction which will have your heart ready to explode!

After Infection, we ended our night by checking into the Waldorf Hotel. As we entered, we were told to ring the bell for service. We rang it once, nothing. I'm a very impatient person so, I rang the bell numerous times. The Bellhop came in and spewed out a line about checking in. I'm so distracted by his devilish smile and a face only a mother could love. He starts muttering to himself then something takes over his body and he begins yelling uncontrollably at us. With a mallet in hand, he starts questioning us. Once again, I am distracted by the fear this demon has instilled in me and I quickly throw the new guy under the bus.

Finally, he allowed us to pass through. As we made our way through the dark, narrow halls going from room to room, the presence of Oliver grows stronger! We must get out of this hotel! We pushed forward trying not to become the next victims of this demon infested hotel. We saw the exit and ran towards it! We made it out alive!

Fear...Terror...Horror, are just three words that describe what we felt the moment we stepped into Waldorf Hotel. The Bellhop was a menacing figure who instilled terror into our very souls. We feared for our very lives. The Bellhop was amazing and scary all at the same time and did a great job terrifying each of us!

As usual the Scream Queen delivers the fear! Waldorf Estate of Fear is a terrifying attraction. The actors go above and beyond to scare you!
